The second element in kupfernickel is app. G. nickel, dwarf, rascal, mischievous demon, the name being given to the ore because it actually yielded no copper in spite of its appearance (cf. the etym. note to COBALT). Both KUPFERNICKEL and copper nickel (see COPPER sb.[1] 12) have been commonly employed in English as names of this variety of nickel-ore. For an earlier abbreviation in a different sense see NICOL [1].]

OHG. is the only one of the older languages in which a fully developed adjectival use of the word exists along with the adverbial. In OE. there are very scanty traces of adjectival inflexion, néah being commonly employed either as a simple adv. or with a dependent dative: in predicative use it may sometimes be taken as an adjective, but it is more probable that in such cases also it is an adverb. It is not till the 14th or 15th cent. that the attributive use becomes common.

The original comparative of néah as an adv. is nêar, ndor, NEAR adv.[1], while the adj. form nêarra finally became ner, NAR a. The OE. superlative nêhst(a is latterly represented by NEXT a. and adv. After phonetic changes had obscured the relationship of these forms to the positive, a new compar. and superl., nigher and nighest, were formed, and have been in common use since the 16th cent.]

= NEAR adv.[2] and a. (which in all senses has taken the place of nigh except in archaic or dialect use).

Nisey, Nisi, varr. of Nizey a fool. Obs.

‖ Nisi (nəi·səi). Law. [L. nisi unless.] A limiting term added to such words as decree, order, or rule, to indicate that these are not absolute or final, but are to be valid or take effect unless some cause is shown, or reason arises, to prevent this. (Cf. quots. 1860 and 1872.)

1836 Smart s.v. Nisi prius, A rule nisi is a rule unless, i. e. unless cause be shown to the contrary, as distinguished from a rule absolute. 1860 Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144 § 7 Every Decree for a Divorce shall in the first instance be a Decree Nisi, not to be made absolute till after the Expiration of such Time not less than Three Months..., as the Court shall by General or Special Order from Time to Time direct. 1872 Will Wharton's Law Lex., Decree Nisi, remains imperfect for at least six months. 1877–9 Sixon Decrees (ed. 4) I. p. xxvi, Order nisi for Claimant to appear. 1883 Law Rep. 11 *Q. ‖ Nisi prius (nəi·səi prəi·ŏs). Law. Also 8 nisi prise. [L. nisi prius, unless previously. The significance of the phrase is thus explained by Blackstone, Comm. (1768) III. 59:

'All causes commenced in the courts of Westminster-hall are by the course of the courts appointed to be there tried, on a day fixed in some Easter or Michaelmas term by a jury returned from the county, wherein the cause of action arises; but with this proviso, nisi prius justitiarii ad assisas capiendas venerint; unless before the day prefixed the judges of assise come into the county in question.'

In the second statute of Westminster (1285) § 30, by which the system was instituted, only the word nisi is used. The following is an early example of the full phrase.—

1297 Coram Rege Roll m. 5 dorso (1898) 30 Ideo Vicecomes habeat corpora omnium coram Rege ad prefatum terminum &c. Nisi prius R. le Brabanzon vel G. de Roubyr' vel eorum alter si prius ad partes illas &c.]

No (nō), adv.[1] [Several forms of different origin are included here. Those placed under a (in sense 1) represent OE. nó, f. ne Ne + ó always, var. of á: see A adv. and O adv. The second group (β) contains the southern or midland representatives of OE. nd (see Na adv.[1]); the later examples, however, are somewhat uncertain, and some of them may be misprints for not. In early northern and Scottish texts (γ) no is prob. a scribal alteration of original na or ne; but the later Scottish no (from c 1600) appears to be a reduced form of nōth for nocht Nought (cf. dōther for dochter, and mou' for mouth).] = Not.

Non, obs. form of NONE, NOON, NUN.

Non- (nɒn), prefix (also 4–6 noun-, noon-, 5 nom-, 5–6 nowne-, 5–7 none-, often written separate), used to express negation. The earlier formations were either directly adopted from, or modelled upon, Anglo-French compounds in noun- = OF. non-, nom-, nun-, num- (mod.F. non-):—L. nōn 'not' used as a prefix; from about 1500 the predominant form of the prefix is that of the L. nōn. It appears first in English towards the end of the 14th c. in non power (Chaucer, Langland, Wyclif), and non-residence, nonsuit (Wyclif). In the 15th and 16th c. a considerable number of compounds (chiefly nouns of action and gerunds) were in use, most of them being of a legal character. Until about the middle of the 17th c. the compounds formed with non- are mostly of a special or technical kind, but from that time the prefix became less restricted in its use and began to be prefixed freely to substantives, adjectives and adverbs, participles, and verbal sbs. (rarely to infinitival forms). To the political and religious movements of the 17th and 18th c. are due many new formations, some of which, as nonconformist, non-juror, non-resistance, have a permanent place in the language.

In the majority of the compounds of non- the hyphen is usually retained; but it is commonly omitted in the case of a few, such as nonconformist, noncntily, nonsense, in which the etymology has been to some extent lost sight of. Normally the prefix is unstressed, but in the disyllables nonage, non-claim, nonsense, nonsuit, and in nonchalance, -ant, nondescript, the non- receives the stress. It is also liable to be stressed when the compound and the simple word are coupled together, as to act or no n-act, distribution or no'n-distribution, being and no n-being.

Formations having an independent status or a continuous history during any period are entered as Main words; a small proportion of the remainder are illustrated in this article, no attempt having been made to represent with any degree of fullness the very extensive development in the use of the prefix during the last hundred years.
